

A flag at your feet

Kate will probably be wearing the equivalent of a glass slipper when she marries her prince but if she fancies some comfy flats under her dress these collector's item loafers could be the perfect choice.

A reworking of the Etna slip-on, in red, white and blue with Union flag insoles, they are traditional and quirky.

Only 1,400 are being made in the Hotter factory and they come in a keepsake box with a spare pair of everyday insoles and an authenticity certificate.

The Royal shoe costs £65 and is available from www.hottershoes.com or by ringing 0800 083 8490.

Fit for a princess

Princess Catherine-to-be is famously sporty, inspiring Heidi Klein's new collection - The Catherine.

The statement swimwear combines white and navy, a hint of nautical stripes and gold accents with classic styles and v-necks.

Heidi Klein said: "The range is young, elegant and sporty, it would be perfect for the honeymoon and she always looks fantastic in bikinis."

Crown jewels

The Royal Wedding is officially pants as far as Topshop is concerned. The fashion boutique is producing a range of knickers emblazoned with Union flags, crests and saucy slogans like "Still looking for my Prince". Not sure he's hiding in your lingerie drawer. They are priced from £4.
